The influence of Minsterworth on the work of FWH. An imaginary Place?

Eleanor Rawling has observed that Minsterworth acted as a repository of a deeper belief in Harvey's identity as an Englishman. In this sense, it is also a 'creation of the poets' minds, in which Gurney and Harvey have crossed time and space to evoke a distinctive 'spirit' of England'.

Biographies

Terry Moore-Scott

Terry has been extensively published in journals on a variety of topics and produced books and films about Minsterworth where he lives. He shares a love of the village with Will Harvey and has extensively researched the history of his village. Over time he has gathered evidence of the strength of the bond between Will and Minsterworth and in his article Terry illustrates how the landscape and people informed his poetry.

Eleanor Rawling

Eleanor M. Rawling has been a prominent member of the Ivor Gurney Society for many years. Eleanor is a consultant in geographical education, a research fellow at the University of Oxford and an established author, having written several books with geographical or educational themes. She is also a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and a former president of the Geographical Association. She has recently published Walking Gloucestershire with Ivor Gurney (2025). This book introduces readers and walkers to the Gloucestershire places that inspired and grounded Gurney's poetry.

Cheryl Mayo

Cheryl Burman grew up as the child forever reading on her bed. But as this was Australia, she was also often tempted outside to the beach and the yabby creeks near her suburban home. When she moved to the Forest of Dean the landscape and rich history inspired her to write. Cheryl is a multi-genre author, that is, she writes what she feels like. Her historical fantasy River Witch was published in 2022 and best-selling The Herbalist's Daughters this year.

Doug McLean

Doug McLean has been responsible for publishing numerous local authors who might otherwise have never appeared in print. In 1982, Doug edited a compilation of F.W. Harvey's poems, including 30 previously unpublished works, in a volume that led to a resurgence of interest. The Forest Review described his publication of 'Collected poems' as the publishing event of the year. Doug was described as 'the inspired young Coleford publisher and bookseller who has helped to fire new interest in will Harvey.'

John Slater

John's practice centres on creating installation art about local history and landscape, which uses found objects, texts, film, recycled materials and anything else which has relevant meaning as itself as well as in how it is shaped and decorated. John, artist in residence at Dean Heritage Centre is looking at the Forest of Dean Writers' Collection. He will use this collection to make art installations linked to the museum's permanent exhibits. The museum will display these installations throughout the year. John's innovative approach will breathe new life into the museum's narrative, weaving together the stories of the Forest of Dean with his artistic vision.

Maggie Clutterbuck

Maggie is a well-known part of the contemporary writing scene in the Forest of Dean today. Maggie Clutterbuck is a Contemporary poet, novelist, creative writing teacher, and former Forest Bard. A published novelist and poet she also works in education teaching creative writing. She won the Forest Bard award in 2005 and has regularly performed her poetry in and around the Forest. She has three major poetry collections: Digging Deep, Full Circle and Jackdaw Summer.
